
If you open up that list of cards, and sort it by due date (or by name), you'll see that these tasks aren't organized in any particular way: But in fact, we can use Trello a little bit smarter. The Due Date is an easy one to use. But what if we also, in the list itself, have a list of all the people? Maybe I'm supposed to get them to review something for me. Or something else. Maybe I want them to get my contact information and ask them for their opinions of a company for an upcoming project. So I'm not going to put a To-Do card into a queue. I'm going to put it right into the list, because I don't actually need f678ea9f9e
